Re: Remote Web Designer / UI Designer

Hi Coalition team,

I'm applying for the Web Designer / UI Designer role. I design brand systems and websites for clients out of my own one-person studio, from the logo and brand guide down to the responsive mockups and the final coded pages. Portfolio and live sites are at onyxmode.co.

A few recent things. A car-rental booking site with vehicle cards, a date-picker flow that calculates per-car totals, and per-vehicle checkout, designed clean and built responsive. A full brand and website redesign for a real estate client. And my own studio's brand system from scratch: logo, a locked color palette, a type scale in Fraunces and Inter, and a written voice guide. I design the interface and then build it myself, so my handoffs come out developer-ready, mostly because I'm the developer who has to catch them.

I'll be straight about the tools. My daily stack is web-native and AI-native more than the full Adobe and Figma suite, and I'm building fluency there now. What I already have is the harder part to teach: real command of the visual fundamentals and brand thinking, proven by work that clients paid for and still use. You said strong skills-test performance can outweigh missing experience. That's exactly the bet I'm asking you to let me make. Watch me work.

My written and spoken English is strong, I'm remote-ready with a fast setup, and I can hold the Monday to Friday Pacific hours. I'd genuinely enjoy designing for a team that ships this much client work.

Thanks for reading,

Anthony Magdalena
